Brand Components

Our Logomark

This is our corporate logo. It should only appear in SnapLogic Blue or White.

A registered trademark symbol must always accompany the SnapLogic logo, and must appear in the prescribed position. Do not modify or edit the logo mark in any way.

Our logos can be downloaded here.

Using Our Logomark

The SnapLogic logo is composed of two pieces; (Fig 1) The OG symbol and (Fig 2.) The SnapLogic Wordmark. The OG Symbol may appear by itself, but it can never be the primary brand element. It must always be used in a supporting role to the wordmark. For example, it can go on the sleeve of a t-shirt, with the full logomark on front, but the OG mark cannot go on the front, by itself. Another example, is that it may appear in the corner of a presentation doc, but never on the cover slide, or divider slide by itself.

The logo may not be modified, or abbreviated in any way. When written out in copy, you want to capitalize the S and L, so it reads as SnapLogic.

Clear space is the area around the logo so that it has ample room to breathe as seen in the diagrams. The rules of clear space for the SnapLogic brand is simple. (Fig 3.) The space is the size of the "O" from the same logomark or OG symbol.

Primary Color Palette

These are our primary brand colors. We lead with SnapLogic Blue, as it works well as a large background color, or for large headlines.

SnapLogic Jade is our second primary color. Use it for subheadings, call out boxes, call to action buttons and other areas to give more energy and variety to a page full of blues.

We use Midnight as our primary dark colors and it is our replacement for black. The only instance where we should use black is with body text such as in paragraph copy. All of our secondary colors (as featured on the next page) work well against these darker colors.

Color Combo Rules

In order to maintain a sophisticated brand, restraint must be used when using color. Depending on the brand campaign, activation or tactic, a cool or warm palette should be chosen.

Start with a primary SnapLogic color and add secondary colors sparingly. Think of using our brighter colors like seasoning instead of it being the main dish.

We use two primary fonts across all of our platforms from our website to presentation decks, to assets and collateral.

Poppins is our headline font, only to be used for large headlines. Download Poppins from Google Fonts

Roboto is our everyday body copy font used for the majority of written text. Use it on presentation decks, collateral, letterhead and any other branded document. Download Roboto from Google Fonts

Color Gradients

Gradients can be used as background elements to give some extra flavor and excitement to a presentation slide, web page, field booth or other item.

Use these sparingly and look into asset templates, master slides, etc. for guidance.

The Cool Gradient build uses the three primary colors with our darks in different configurations to create a dynamic color fill.

The Hello Gradient build uses Pink, Yellow and White to create an energetic and bright infusion of color.

The Symbol Pattern

Our patterns are derived from the OG symbol mark, and combined together, it can be used to create abstract patterns, or used with a non-connected circle to create a repeating pattern.

We always keep the symbol oriented in the same direction as in the OG symbol mark and we only use connectors of the OG mark.

The pattern can be used with solid colors from our primary palette, or used with transparency (50% shown at right) to create a subtle texture on a colored background.

Do not rotate, change, outline or fill in the symbol.

Our Icons

Our Icons are multicolored and combined together to convey specific industry or product categories, features or concepts on website applications or presentation decks.

Ideally they should be used small, and not as spot illustrations.

Photography

Photography is an integral part of our asset design and follows a simple philosophy. Whether stock images or SnapLogic event photography is used, images should be well lit, sharp focused and use minimal post processing. Subject matter should be colorful, energetic and convey professionalism, collaboration and trust.
